The Zhouyi and the First Four Wings of the Yijing

In Matrix Translation

Introductory Notes

This version of the Yi gives one line of information for each heading and each word in the Chinese text. It reads from top to bottom, like the Chinese original. The sequence of the headings is a little different from that in the Simple Translation. The Da Xiang resumes its place as a later commentary. Since the Tuan Zhuan often quotes from the Gua Ci and the Xiao Xiang from the Yao Ci, these pairs were placed adjacent to each other for easy cross-reference.

This is a more advanced and difficult text. It is intended for more careful and slower study of the Chinese text's broader meanings, deliberate ambiguities, and choices between translations. Even then it is only meant to be read a few paragraphs at a time.

The idea for a multidimensional translation grew out of a recommendation made to a friend that he not try to grasp Laozi by reading one favorite translation but to pick at least three and "add them together" to "broaden" the words. The "one word, one line" idea, forming a two-dimensional tapestry of potential meanings, came later and seemed to allow for an adequate breadth.

The information in this Matrix translation is organized into seven columns with the alternative English words occupying the sixth. Following is a guide to the various kinds of information given in each of the columns (refer to the beginning of the Matrix itself, to see the columns numbered):

1) Far left. The bold numbers indicate a new heading, by Hexagram or Gua number, followed by a section code:

.M Gua Ming, the Hexagram Name or Title.

.0 Gua Ci, the original or Zhouyi Hexagram Text.

.# Yao Ci, the original or Zhouyi Changing Line Text, line number, top last.

.T Tuan Zhuan, or the Commentary on the Judgment, a later commentary on the Gua Ci, comprising the Yijing's First and Second Wings or Appendices.

.X Da Xiang, or the Overall Image, a later commentary which looks at the Hexagram or the Gua itself as a composite of two Ba Gua, or Trigrams (aka Ban Xiang or half-images) and then derives lessons for living. This is a part of the Yijing's Third and Fourth Wings or Appendices.

.x Xiao Xiang, or the Little Images, a later commentary on the Yao Ci, comprising the remainder of the Third and Fourth Wings. Despite being included in the same Wing as the Da Xiang, the authors are entirely different.

Within the area between headings are asterisks. These indicate a "parsing," or the separation of the text into groups of words. These were not found in the original text but were added later for clarity. They will sometimes act like periods, commas, colons, semi-colons, or breaks in a line of poetry: there is no certain rule. With only one exception (at 02.0), I have followed fairly traditional parsing, usually as given in Z.D. Sung's text. For more information on variants see the Footnotes below. In the Tuan Zhuan and Xiao Xiang sections, a "harder" parsing is given for paragraphs by the letter "P," and for sentences by the letter "S". These will often take the place of the Chinese particle ye, which indicates the completion of a thought. Ye is the only Chinese word which has been left out of the Matrix.

2) This column gives the Pinyin transliteration of the Chinese character. Many of the characters have alternate pronunciations, according to their intended meanings, so two different spellings here may refer to the same character. This happens at the Yi's first word, qian2, to create, which is also gan1, to dry. Be aware also that the same Pinyin word and Chinese character can carry wildly different meanings. The word xu1 (2847), for example, means "beard" at 22.2, "female bondservant" at 54.3 and "necessity" at 05.T. The Pinyin system only recently replaced the Wade-Giles system as the standard for transcription. This was the transition where Peking became Beijing and Taoism became Daoism. For readers unfamiliar with Pinyin, the two systems are compared at the end of the Glossary. The four pronunciation tones sometimes represent choices between optional pronunciations. Here I would generally follow Karlgren unless there was a significant preponderance of disagreement shared by Mathews, Schuessler, Kunst, Ulving and Wieger.

3) This four-digit number is the character's entry number in Harvard's Mathew's Chinese English Dictionary, 1993, which is organized alphabetically but in the Wade-Giles system. Only eleven of the words used in the Yijing, all of them in the Zhouyi, were left out of this dictionary. I have assigned these eleven reference numbers in the 8000's. Where the four-digit number is omitted from this column the character is a quoted citation from the section immediately preceding, in the Gua Ci or the Yao Ci. These are the words which are italicized in Part One. Where the number is underlined this is the first occurrence of a character which is described in more detail in the main part of the Glossary. Use this number to search for characters.

4) This column contains one of two kinds of numbers. If this is the first appearance of the character in the text, this number will contain a plus (+) sign (e.g. 109+13). The number found before the plus sign gives the conventional number of this character's "radical" or root component. The number after the sign gives the number of additional strokes added to the radical (plus or minus a stroke since some people count differently). This is the way many Chinese dictionaries are accessed. This will not work in a "modern" dictionary with simplified characters, and where some of the classical characters were edited out of the language itself. If this character has already appeared in the text, the number in this column will contain a decimal point (e.g 08.1 or 08.X). This gives the location of the character's first entry or appearance historically in the Yijing, that is, first in the Zhouyi, and then in the Wings. For example, if a character's first appearance is at 01.1x (in the Xiao Xiang or the Third Wing) one may infer that the character did not appear at all in the Zhouyi. This word, by the way, is the familiar yang, as in yin and yang, which many people wrongly assume has been with the Yi from the beginning.

5) This column gives the location of the character's next appearance in the Yi, once again, first in the Zhouyi and then in the Wings. This feature is meant to take the place of a concordance, so that the use of a word can be traced throughout the remaining book. In cases where a word is used frequently, this space is simply left blank after the first few occurrences. But these words will be found in the Glossary, where there is given a range of alternative English translations greater than that of the sum of their Matrix occurrences. If you are using an electronic version of the Matrix you will find it easier to use the Find command and the four-digit Mathews number to track the occurrences of a word. The letter "F" in this column means that this is the Final occurrence of the word. The letters "HL" indicate that the word is an Hapax Legomenon (in a lesser sense of the term), a word used only once in the Yijing.

6) This column offers an average of three or four alternative English translations of the Chinese word as the word is shaped by this specific context. Commas here usually separate interchangeable alternatives, while the semicolons separate slightly different syntactic or grammatical options. Words in parentheses are either alternative modifiers, or optional in an English rendering, or strictly inferred English grammar, or indicators of a specific facet of an English word. A word in brackets indicates an anachronistic English translation, not suitable for use in translation, but still informative, or an explanatory comment. Up and Down pointers (^v) indicate that the word order may be reversed in the English translation. This is most often the case with the post-positioning of the Chinese prepositions. A plus sign (+) in this column means that you will find more notes and glosses on this character in the Glossary segment oddly titled "Characters not in the Glossary."

7) At the far right, in cases where a phrase is repeated elsewhere in the Yi, a number will give the location of the phrase's next occurrence, with ditto marks below to indicate the extent of the phrase. The last occurrence of a phrase points cyclically back to the first. The versatile and oft-repeated wu jiu (no blame, not bad, nothing wrong, without a mistake, not a mistake, make no mistakes, no harm done, etc.) may be tracked through the Zhouyi by following jiu in column 5, from its first occurrence at 01.3.

At the end of the Matrix section for each of the Gua there are miscellaneous sections:

##.xc gives further glosses and insights on the Gua Ming, excerpted from the Xi Ci Zhuan, the Commentary on the Appended Phrases, a.k.a. Da Zhuan, the Great Commentary, Wings 5 and 6. The Xi Ci Zhuan only examines nine of the Gua.

##.xg does the same for the Xu Gua, the Sequence of the Hexagrams, Wing 9.

##.zg does the same for the Za Gua, the Assorted or Miscellaneous Hexagrams, Wing 10.

##.m gives the Hexagram Name as found in the Mawangdui manuscript. This is treated here as a simply another gloss of the Gua Ming in the received version. These names differ in thirty-two of the sixty-four cases. In several, the differences are significant.

##.#wy offers selected quotations from the Wen Yan Zhuan, the Commentary on Words of the Text, Wing 7, which expands and expounds on only the first two Gua.
